1.0 Introduction

When we were kids our teachers used to ask “What is your favourite hobby?” 90% of the students in class will say their favourite hobby is reading books. It does not matter what type of books that they read as long as they can proudly to say that they are bookworm. Why it is happen that way? The reason is because since we were little kids we had been exposed to the importance of reading books. Everyone believes only by reading a lot of books you will be success in future and it is not wrong because with the knowledge you get from reading the books, it will help you in building up the beliefs, perceptions, attitude and opinion when confronting with the world. Reading a book is never gets tired or bored but, if we fail to understand the context, it could lead to misconception or misunderstanding. That is why translation is crucial in order to help us understand better in interpreting the meanings. Speaking of translation, it is recognized as a means of communication because it is used to learn foreign language. Besides, translation is very important as it develop qualities that are necessary especially for language students to improve their flexibility, accuracy, and clarity in searching for the most suitable words to portray what is meant. Through this assignment, the students could broaden their own thoughts as well as strengthen their translation skills by contributing their ideas.

This paper studies the artwork entitled “Dunia Tanpa Tembok” originally written by one of the most famous writers, Ayman Rashdan Wong with its translated version in English, “World Without Wall”. Briefly, this book talks about the knowledge related to international geopolitics and international relationship that involve society, politics, and economy. The techniques used by the author will be analyzed in depth which including translation procedures such as borrowing, literal translation, calque, equivalence, and transposition in several selected chapters like Melayu Raya, Perlawanan Orang Gila, Island Chains: Obsesi Geopolitik China., Apa yang Duterte Mahu?, and Minutes to Midnight.

2.0 Synopsis

“Knowledge is power. Language is symbolic. Geography is destiny”

Dunia Tanpa Tembok, or in the English version, World Without Walls, is the first book of the World Without Walls series by Ayman Rashdan Wong. The book tells us about geopolitics and international relation by focusing on the three expressions above. The author describes the three expressions as the factors that can bring differences among humans to reach an agreement and understand one another. The book highlights the knowledge about international geopolitics that one must know as it is the key to the survival of countries and nations. Moreover, the knowledge gained must be based on the principle of Realism, Diplomacy, and Patriotism. It starts with the first chapter about ‘The Name of Our Country,’ and the last chapter is about ‘Malaysia-North Korea Diplomatic Crisis’ and those principles was explained in through all the chapters in the book.

3.0 Why it is translated

Dunia Tanpa Tembok (DTT) is first produced in the Malay language. Then, it is translated to the English language, known as World Without Walls (WWW), and recently, it is translated to the Korean language by Dr. Jung Sang Chun, a high official in South Korea. The translation into the English language is typically to enter the international market. Ayman Rashdan Wong has received National Book Award 2019 for Dunia Tanpa Tembok II. Besides, Dunia Tanpa Tembok I has reached the National Library of Singapore as there was a high demand for the book. Furthermore, the DTT series has surpassed the Bestseller Kinokuniya KLCC chart. Wong also mentioned in his Facebook post that the English version is suitable for those who are uncomfortable reading in the Malay language.

4.0 Technique and Procedures of Translation in Dunia tanpa Tembok to World without Walls

4.1 Calque

Calque is one of the direct translation procedures that imitates the structure or manner of the other language. The procedure is similar to borrowing. It also borrows the words from another language but with translation to create a new lexeme in the target language. Usually, calque happens in the target language. But in these books, the calque procedure happens from target language to the source language. Below are the examples for calque:

Example 1 and 2

Example 1: Judul tersebut diilhamkan oleh Jam Kiamat (Doomsday Clock) yang dicipta oleh sekumpulan saintis di Universiti Chicago pada tahun 1947, setelah Perang Dingin bermula.	The title was inspired by the Doomsday Clock created by a group of scientists at the University of Chicago in 1947, after the start of the Cold War.
Example 2: Kiamat di sini merujuk kepada nuclear Armageddon atau perang nuklear antara US dan Russia, di mana jumlah senjata nuklear yang dimiliki oleh mereka lebih cukup daripada memusnahkan dunia.	Doomsday refers to a nuclear Armageddon or nuclear war between the US and Russia, where a number of nuclear weapons owned by the two states are more than enough to blow the world.

The phrase 'Jam Kiamat' and 'perang nuklear' are translated through the procedure of lexical calque from the target language to the source language. The source language imitates the target language with syntactic respect but with a new mode of expression. For instance, in Example 1, the word 'Doomsday clock' is already original. That is why the procedure is said to be from the target language to the source language. The structure of the source language and the target language is different, in which the target language puts the adjective in front of the noun, while the source language is contrary. Therefore, instead of 'nuklear perang' in Example 2, it becomes ‘perang nuklear’. However, since the source language's whole sentence is already borrowed from the target language, the translation from the source language, which is in the Malay language, to the target language, the English language is more accessible. Calque usually is used in the target language, but in these examples, the calques procedures happen from the target language the source language.

Example 3:

Semua persoalan ini dapat dirungkai dengan melihat pada sebuah masalah geopolitik China yang bernama “Rantai Pulau” (Island Chain)	All of the above can be digested by understanding a geopolitical problem of China known as the Island Chain .

Calque is used when an expression from the source text is transferred literally to the target text. The words “Island Chain” are borrowed from the target language although there is meaning towards the phrase. So, it is unnecessary for the author to insert the words from target text in the source text as there is a specific meaning which define the words which are “Rantai Pulau”. However, since it is related to historical event, the author decided to attach it together to make it clear for the readers. Besides, the reason of using calque technique is because, it respects the syntactic structure of source language.

4.2 Transposition

Translators used a variety of techniques in order to achieve great results. There are a number of methods that can be used to translate the target text sounds better. One of the common techniques used in translation is a transposition. The transposition technique holds a meaning of replacing one's word-class with another without changing the original meaning of the source text. This translation approach introduces a change in grammatical structure. Transposition can be categorized into a few types, one of which is a free transposition, whereby the transposition use is dependent in the particular context. For instance, back-translation.

4.2.1 Sentence Structure Transposition

Example 1:

Source Language	Target Language
Sebelum Perjanjian Inggris - Belanda (Anglo - Dutch Treaty) tahun 1824, tidak wujud "sempadan" Malaysia dan Indonesia.	There was never a Malaysian and Indonesian 'border' before the 1824 Anglo - Dutch Treaty.

This example used Transposition technique by transposing the sentence structure from the source language to target language. If it is translated directly according to the sentence structure of the source language, so the sentence in target language will be start with "Before the 1824...". But to adhere with the target language context and grammatical rules so the sentence is translated by using sentence structure transposition procedures. Even though it has the difference but the meaning of the sentence can still be conveyed.

Example 2:

Source Language	Target Language
Kepulauan Sumatra, Jawa, Kalimantan dan Sulawesi misalnya, disatukan sebagai “Hindia Timur” di bawah penjajah Belanda.	Under the Dutch, the isles of Sumatra, Java, Kalimantan, and Sulawesi for example, were grouped together as “East India”.

For the second example, this sentence uses the same technique of translation which is transposition of sentence structure. As we can see in the source language, the author explains about the Indonesian region which ‘Kepulauan Sumatra, Jawa, Kalimantan dan Sulawesi’ first then said it is grouped as in Dutch governance like ‘di bawah penjajah Belanda’ so when it is translated into target language the sentence is transposed where the Indonesian region is explained after the Dutch governance like ‘Under the dutch’. This happens because to make the translation is more vary and interesting rather than just follow directly the sentence structure of the source language even though both languages have the same word order and it would not be hard for the readers to understand what is meant by the author.

Example 3:

Source language	TARGET LANGUAGE
US pertama kali menggunakan bom nuklear pada tahun 1945 untuk menamatkan Perang Dunia Kedua (WW2).	The maiden use of the nuclear bomb by the US in 1945 was to end the Second World War.

Since transposition highlights the grammatical changes between the source language and the target language, Example 3 is another example to prove this translation procedure. In the source language, the highlighted phrases are in verb phrase while in the target language, the part of speech of the phrases is in adjective phrase. The change in the part of speech, from the verb phrase to the adjective phrase shows the process of the transposition procedure.

4.3 Borrowing

Borrowing technique is one of the procedures in direct translation. This technique is chosen when a language takes words from other language directly without translation (Vargas, 2017). Besides, it has two types of Borrowing which are Pure Borrowing and Naturalized Borrowing. For Pure Borrowing it is directly take the words or phrases from the source language without changing their spelling. (Pahamzah, et.al, 2020). Next, Naturalized Borrowing is borrowing a source language words or phrases by adapting it to the syntactic structure of the Target Language. (Pahamzah, et.el, 2020). This type of borrowing is also similar with cultural borrowing. In this book, Dunia tanpa Tembok this technique is not frequently happen when it is translated into target language which the English version, World without Walls instead, the author keep using this technique in the original version where when the book is written in Bahasa Melayu there are some words and special terms on Law, Geopolitics and International Relations is directly borrowed from the target language. Therefore, it leads the book to not have fully written in the author's native language holistically but has a mixed language in the whole book which known as informal language or 'Rojak language'. It can be seen in the examples below:

4.3.1 Pure Borrowing

Example 1:

Source Language	Target Language
Selepas penjajah datang, mereka “ re - construct ” balik identiti orang Nusantara mengikut acuan mereka.	After the arrival of the colonialists, they reconstructed the identity of Nusantara people according to their mould.

This sentence used literal translation in translating all words of the source language to the target language. In this example, the problem is not with the target language because it is translated correctly but the problem is with the source language where the author kind of mixed up the source language with one word from target language to interpret his meaning which the word ‘re-construct’ and use SL word to add one the meaning which ‘balik’ while ‘re-construct’ means ‘baik pulih’ or ‘baiki semula’ in source language. Besides, according to the source language context they do have words to indicate the TL language which it will be ‘memperbaiki’ but the author did not used it. The reason behind it we think because Malaysian tend to code mixing TL and SL in their conversation and it had known as ‘Rojak language’ where everyone think it is common. Sometimes, this condition did help the readers to feel more understand with what the author is saying.

4.3.2 Cultural Borrowing

Example 2:

Source text	Target text
Kalau Korea Utara jatuh diserang US, ia akan mengancam keselamatan China yang memerlukan Korea Utara sebagai buffer state	If North Korea fell to the US, it would threaten the security of China which needs North Korea as a buffer state .

Based on the example above, the phrase buffer state is in italics as they are considered to be foreign which indicate the words are borrowed from the target language. The type of borrowing used by the author here is called as cultural borrowing which the borrowed words are similar to the original words in target language. Cultural borrowing is defined as words that fill gaps in the recipient language's store of words because they stand for objects or concepts new to the language's culture. Although there is an equivalent meaning for the phrase "buffer state" in Malay which is "negara penampan", the author however fully adopts the phrase in source text. Since this book is all about politics, most of the words are jargon that correlate to the law and politics terms. Borrowing is the common technique used by most of the translators depends on the reasons as what Grasilli (2015) claims that firstly there may be no equivalent meaning of the word in the target language and it may also serve to highlight the cultural context of the source text. The author might want to maintain the genre of the book which is geopolitics by adding some of jargon words that related to the field.

Example 3:

Source language	Target language
Russia dan Korea Utara ada seribu alasan untuk melancarkan first strike kerana ini adalah soal kelangsungan hidup mereka.	Russia and North Korea have a thousand excuses to launch a first strike because this is a matter of their survival.

Example 3 is another example of cultural borrowing. Even though the author can use the literal translation for the phrase, he uses borrowing instead to show the impact of the word, which the literal translation into the source language might not deliver.

4.4 Equivalence technique

Translation is a process of communicating the meaning of a source language (SL) text to an accurate meaning of the target language text (TL). However, it can never be 100% accurate meaning with the original ones. Translation theorist have compiled various procedures to deal with the different types of text in translations. One of the methods used by translators is equivalence. Discussing the definition of equivalence or also knows as reformulation, it produces an equivalent text in the target language by using different style and structural methods, that can appear at word level and above word level, when translating from SL to TL. Applying an equivalent word define as replacing one words or unit of translation with another meaning that is similar in TL as from SL. According to Baker (1992), translation approach of equivalence should be considered as the first element by the translator when translating words from one language into another. Moreover, equivalent generally refers to the commonly accepted and it is used of idioms, proverbs, idiomatic expression and lexicalized term of a source language term. When it is hard to express the meaning of the SL to TL, the translators have to translate the meaning in a completely different ways for instance in terms of translating idioms or advertising slogans. Although the process of translating using equivalent procedure is involves a creative way from SL to TL, but it could be quite confusing and it is not easy to find the possible accurate meaning of TL.

4.4.1 Descriptive Equivalence

Example 1:

Source Language	Target Language
Kita? Inggeris jahat memang jahat, tapi sekurang - kurangnya mereka bertamandun.	Not so much for us Malaysians. The British were bad, but at least they were civilized.

Next, this sentence used literal translation to translate the whole sentence while for the word 'kita' the author used descriptive equivalence procedures when it is translated in target language which to explain who 'kita' means in English language context, so it became 'Not so much for us Malaysians'. If the author use literal translation too for the word 'kita' and become 'we' the readers might not really understand to whom the author is referring to. If in SL it might be okay for Malaysian readers as they clearly understand the context of their native language.

Example 2:

Source Language	Target Language
Yang ada hanyalah Kepulauan Melayu, Alam Melayu atau Nusantara.	There was only Malay Archipelago, Malay world and Nusantara

This sentence used direct translation procedures for the whole sentence where no words or phrases is being transposed just to suite the target language context. However, there are some words in the sentence which use different translation technique to deliver the meaning of the words. For example, if the literal meaning of the word ‘Alam’ when translated to target language, English it will be ‘nature’ but we think the author might sense the word ‘nature’ is not suitable to use in explaining the context to show about the Malay civilization so he changes from ‘nature’ to ‘world’ to translate the phrase of ‘Alam Melayu’. Next, the author translates the word ‘kepulauan’ to a special term in English like ‘Archipelago’ not ‘Island’ and the word ‘Nusantara’ is keep the same in target language because no words in English could define the word and to treasure the special term of Malaya community in Asia. Therefore, these words the authors used Equivalence procedures where he replaced one word or unit of translation with another that is present in the TL that gives as similar a meaning as that of the SL.

4.4.2 Functional equivalence

Example 3:

Jarum jam akan bergerak ke kiri dan kanan mengikut rentak perubahan geopolitik dunia.	The clock hand would move from left to right according to the changes in the world's geopolitics.

Example 3 shows that in the target language, the phrase 'clock hand' is equivalence to 'jarum jam'. The word 'jarum' would means 'needle' in the target language if it is translated literally. But it would be unsuitable in the target language if the phrase becomes 'clock needle'. Therefore, functional equivalence is used to show that the words are completely different but deliver the same meaning.

4.5 Literal Translation

Next, is literal translation technique. In this book this technique is mostly used throughout the whole book. We think this translation procedure is widely use because of the same structure of word order of the source language, Bahasa Melayu and the target language, English. As literal translation is a translation that translated a source language text according to their grammatical and idiomatically of the target language, we can easily detect the words and phrases that shows the meaning of the word in source language. In addition, when the literal translation is used in translating the source language to target language it does shows that the meaning that the author wants to deliver in the source language is much more well interpreted in target language. Below are the examples, that shows how well literal translation technique is used in translating Malay language to English as usually we might see this technique is used when translating from English to Malay language:

Example 1:

Source Language	Target Language
Bagi mereka, merah Sang Saka Merah Putih melambangkan darah yang ditumpah semasa revolusi memggulingkan Belanda. Jangan main - main	To them, the red color Sang Saka Merah Putih flag represents the blood spilled during the revolution to overthrow the Dutch

For the whole sentence, literal translation technique is used to translate from SL to TL. But there are certain word and phrase that used different technique in translation. For example, TL used pure borrowing procedures when it directly borrows the phrase from SL which is ‘Sang Saka Merah Putih’ where in SL it is recognised as a proper noun and in Target Language there is no other words could interpret and retain the meaning, so the author just directly took the word from SL. In addition, ‘Sang Saka Merah Putih’ is elaborated more to make the readers understand what it is so he inserts the word ‘flag’ make another translation technique is used which is Descriptive Equivalence that explain the word ‘flag’ is associated with the phrase ‘Sang Saka Merah Putih’. On top of that, the phrase in SL, ‘Jangan main-main’ it is not translated to TL. We think this phrase is not important for the author to take it into consideration in translating it.

Example 2:

Source text	Target text
Walaupun Trump berjanji untuk berdamai dengan Russia, tetapi bukan mudah untuk mencapainya.	Although Trump promised to make peace with Russia, it is not easy to achieve.

Referring to the example chosen as above, see how the sentence was translated word for word without changing the word structure. The technique used was literal translation whereas the author translated the sentence literally from the source text to the target text.

Example 3:

Source language	Target language
Kiamat di sini merujuk kepada nuclear Armageddon atau perang nuklear antara US dan Russia, di mana jumlah senjata nuklear yang dimiliki oleh mereka lebih cukup daripada memusnahkan dunia.	Doomsday refers to a nuclear Armageddon or nuclear war between the US and Russia, where a number of nuclear weapons owned by the two states are more than enough to blow the world.

The example above shows that the whole sentence is translated literally from the source language to the target language. The structure and the meaning in both languages are the same except from some specific phrases such as ‘nuclear Armageddon’ and ‘nuclear war’.

4.6 Modulation

Modulation is a translation procedure that change the semantic view from one language to another language but still deliver the same meaning of the message.

Example 1:

Source Language	Target Language
Disebabkan tiada identiti bersama, percubaan penyatuan Alam Melayu menjadi “Indonesia Raya” dan “Melayu Raya” gagal.	Due to the lack of common identity, the attempt to unite the Malay world to become “Greater Indonesia” and “Greater Malay” failed.

In this example, the phrases of ‘Indonesia Raya’ and ‘Melayu Raya’ is translated through Modulation technique. In SL the common meaning of the word ‘Raya’ is associate with occasion or festival celebrated by certain ethnic or religion. But aside this meaning the other literal meaning also convey the meaning of something big like a world, so that is the reason the author translated the word ‘Raya’ to ‘Greater’ in TL rather than become ‘Eid Indonesia’ or ‘Eid Malaysia’ because it is not related to the context

Example 2 and 3:

Source language	Target language
Example 2: Disebabkan China dan US saling dengki, tindakan Duterte dilihat akan menamatkan dasar “pro-US, anti-China” yang diamalkan oleh Benigno Aquino III.	Due to cold relations between US and China, Duterte’s tirade and action are seen to put an end to the ‘pro-US, anti-China’ policy’s as practiced by Benigno Aquino III.
Example 3: Mereka gila atau sebenarnya buat-buat gila?	Are they really mad, or they pretend to be mad?

Example 2 and 3 show the process of modulation that happens in the highlighted phrases. The semantics in Example 2 is different as the literal translation for the word ‘dengki’ is envy in the English language. Besides, it is kind of a negative word in the Malay language. When the modulation procedure is applied to the phrase, the author uses phrases ‘cold relations’, which is less negative than the word envy. The same goes for Example 3. Usually, when the word ‘gila’ is used, people will translate it as ‘crazy’ in the English language. The word ‘crazy’ is often taken as a negative word and potentially offensive. Therefore, when the author uses the word ‘mad’ in the target language to describe that out of one’s mind, it becomes less negative.

5.0 Review of Dunia Tanpa Tembok and World Without Walls

Every book has its specialty in its content. Mostly the authors will deliver their thoughts, opinion, and true events just to give some inspiration and life lessons to their readers. Not to deny that books are the literary works that help humans in shaping their perception and thoughts about the world. As for the book ‘Dunia Tanpa Tembok’, the title itself did show a subjective meaning on the content of the book that the author would love to share. This book is categorized as a geopolitics genre where a lot of international issues regarding wars, politics, economy, and social is been discussed in this book.

When we read this book in the source language which Malay language, the author did use a mixed and urban style of language. The author explained the reason why he chose this style instead use the correct way of writing in the Malay Language because he wants his readers to read it with calm and happiness. As this book explained a lot of political issues around the world so it might be hard for certain readers to comprehend the jargon of the area and the explanation too. Through this way, the readers will feel more connected to the writer.

Even though the author has a good intention to his beloved readers especially the ones that are not from the international relation background, but the way of his writing can still be critic. From our analysis, we could say the translated version which the English version, ‘World without Walls’ is much better to understand rather than we read in the Malay version. For example, ‘Apa yang Hindia (India) pun tak tau, buta geografi punya Belanda’ in the original version, Ayman the Author is trying to express his dissatisfaction to the Dutch as someone ignorant about the geography of the Indonesian region but when we read the sentence in the Malay language we need to read it multiple times to get what he wants to interpret rather than when we read in an English version ‘ There was not anything “Indian” about these isles.’ it is much easier and understandable only then we got what he meant in the original version. We think if there is no translated version of his book we might take some time to understand his explanation. However, we respect Ayman’s principle when he wrote the book as his main purpose is just to make the readers feel comfortable with this type of book genre.

On top of that, we acknowledge that the purpose of this assignment is to analyze what techniques and procedures being used to translate the source language to the target language. Unfortunately, through our analysis, we found that the source language is the one that uses a lot of translation technique rather than when it is translated to the target language. If we could say the translated version has less work in when they did the translation. The reason is in the original version, the author mostly borrows many words from the target language. If we could say almost every chapter, he inserts terms from the target language. One of the reasons we found is because of the genre of the book itself. It is a geopolitics book which of course needs to insert the term or jargon from politics, economy, and laws world right? Therefore, we found that there are certain terms in the target language that did not have in the source language, so that is the reason why the author just directly borrows the terms and insert them in his explanation in the original book. For example, terms like ‘first-tier power’ and ‘nuclear deterrence are related to political jargon and these terms did not have in the source language so he needs to directly borrow it.

Yet, some terms have been borrowed directly from the target language but the terms did have their own words in the source language. We think the author should not take this as the easy way for him to explain the content because it would be much better if he could use the correct term in the source language. Moreover, even though he borrows words from the target language he still translates the word again in the source language which we find would it be much easier if he just directly used the word from the source language. It is because it would not disturb the readers' views. For example, the words like 'kepentingan negara (national interest)', 'keseimbangan kuasa (balance of power)' and "re - construct" balik. These words are not jargon for Malaysian readers especially when they read the original text. The readers can understand it easily, so the author does not need to explain the Malay term which the source language into English, the target language. This just makes the book look like a low-quality book not on the content but based on the writing because of a lot of mixed languages or 'Rojak language' between the source language and target language which can be avoided.

In conclusion, overall, this book is great as the content provided did give new knowledge to us where we get to know more about the issues around the world especially in terms of politics, economy, social and law. Not to forget about the history too. Besides, this book cannot be denied from getting the National Book Award Author in 2019. This is what that lead the author to create the translated version in the English language to gather more readers and read about his thought about the world. In addition, the translated version did manage to deliver the message in the original version without any misleading instead much easier for the readers to understand with the usage of simple words, explanation more on special terms, and straightforward type of sentence. We feel so grateful for the translated version. Lastly, we could say that the translated version is much better than the original version.

6.0 Conclusion

By and large, translation is very important for our everyday use to help us far from miscommunication or misconception when dealing with a foreign language. The translation is required for the global dissemination of new information, knowledge, and ideas. It is essential to develop communication across different cultures. Translation has the power to alter history in the process of spreading new information. Besides, translating works has never been easy as it requires a lot of effort in order to avoid mistranslation that could lead to misunderstanding. However, with the proper techniques are given are able to help the translators to translate it right. As mentioned above, some of the methods we can use to ensure the texts we translate the example from the source language to target language are close to accurate even though it is not entirely equivalent to the original meaning, but the message still can be understood.

When doing translation, some elements or issues need to be considered, which would fall under culture, structure, and the terms to ensure that the meaning of the text being translated is not far from its original content. If not, the translators would encounter many problems when translating, one of which the intended meaning would not be able to convey to the readers. Thus, the method of translating from source text to the targeted text should be considered by choosing the nearest words that would be possible accurate to the targeted language to ensure the messages remain the same as the original ones.

All things that have been considered, the translators of the book deserve appreciation for the translated work even though certain parts of the content might differ a bit from the original ones. The translator did a good job considering that translation works are not easy as we thought. The translation of the book enables readers from different languages to gain information and messages about the politics that happen across the globe. The readers from the targeted language will be able to receive the same content as what the author portrays in the original text. This proves that translation would enlighten everyone from different cultures who speak other languages and get the same information as the source text illustrated.

Bab Apa yang Duterte Mahu?

APA YANG DUTERTE MAHU?

Pemilihan Rodrigo Duterte sebagai presiden Filipina seolah-olah akan menamatkan status Filipina sebagai konco US. Beliau buat kejutan dengan panggil Obama "nokharom" dan suruh Obama "pergi mampuih", dan merancang untuk melawat China dalam masa terdekat. Filipina dan China yang bertelagah pasal hak milik Spratly nampaknya akan berdamai. Disebabkan China dan US saling dengki, tindakan Duterte dilihat akan menamatkan dasar "pro-US, anti-China" yang diamalkan oleh Benigno Aquino III. Namun Duterte menegaskan bahwa hubungan pertahanan dengan US masih kekal, walaupun beliau tidak berhasrat untuk menyertai latihan bersama.

Kenapa Duterte tidak konsisten? Sampai kerajaan US pun tertanya-tanya apa lagi Duterte mahu? Ada orang anggap Duterte seorang yang mental. Sebenarnya, dalam arena hubungan antarabangsa, pemimpin yang mental pun akan jadi waras, sebab ia berkaitan dengan soal hidup dan maut negara. Dalam pengajian hubungan antarabangsa, terdapat satu istilah untuk tindakan Duterte, iaitu HEDGING.

Dalam menghadapi kuasa-kuasa besar, negara boleh memilih untuk balancing (menentang kuasa besar) atau bandwagoning (menuruti kuasa besar). Kalau negara tak kuat untuk menentang kuasa besar yang dianggap ancaman, maka negara akan menubuhkan pakatan (alliance) dengan negara lain. Kedaulatan Filipina terancam dengan keagresifan China, namun Filipina tidak mampu untuk menghadapi China berseorangan, ASEAN pula bukan sebuah pakatan kerenteraan. Jadi Filipina terpaksa untuk menjalin perikatan dengan US (dah lama wujud tapi dinaiktaraf pada tahun 2014) demi mempertahankan Spratly daripada ancaman China. US pun bagi sokongan, kononnya US ni mempertahankan "kebebasan laut", padahal US cuma cari alasan untuk menyekat pengaruh China di Asia.

Kenapa Duterte tidak meneruskan dasar pro-US Aquino? Kerana dalam semua hubungan perikatan dengan kuasa besar, negara-negara kecil akan berhadapan dua risiko: perangkap (entrapment) dan pembuangan (abandonment).

Perangkapan berlaku apabila negara-negara kecil terperangkap dalam permainan kuasa-kuasa besar yang tidak memberi manfaat. Dalam kes hubungan perikatan Filipina-US, matlamat Filipina hanya satu iaitu mempertahankan Spratly. Tapi US mempunyai matlamat yang lebih besar iaitu menyekat pengaruh China dalam semua aspek.

Pada zaman Perang Dingin, ramai negara sanggup jadi konco-konco US sebab US bukan sahaja menawarkan faedah ketenteraan malah faedah ekonomi. Tapi hari ini US tidak lagi memonopoli kuasa ekonomi. Banyak faedah yang US tak dapat tawarkan tetapi China mampu tawarkan. Pada 2015, Filipina mengalami dilema sama ada nak menyertai Asian Infrastructural Investment Bank (AIIB) atau tidak. AIIB ialah sebuah bank yang ditubuhkan oleh China untuk memberi pinjaman kepada negara-negara membangun. US melihat AIIB akan memperkuat pengaruh China, jadi US cuba memujuk konco-konconya untuk tidak menyertai AIIB.

Jepun, konco setia US di Asia, memilih untuk tidak menyertai AIIB. Konco-konco lain seperti Australia dan Korea Selatan iman tak kuat, menyertai AIIB. Aquino fikir punya fikir, akhirnya Filipina menyertai AIIB juga pada Disember 2015. Filipina tak sanggup menyinggung China hanya kerana nak juga hati US. China merupakan rakan dagang terbesar Filipina, sebanyak 1/4 perdagangan luar Filipina adalah dengan China. Ketegangan dengan China yang berterusan hanya akan merugikan Filipina. Jadi, Filipina tidak mahu terus "terperangkap" dengan hubungannya dengan US.

Risiko kedua ialah pembuangan, iaitu menjadi mak buangan US. Duterte tidak mampu meneruskan dasar Aquino kerana kerajaan baru US tidak semestinya akan memberi komitmen yang sama seperti kerajaan Obama. Obama mempunyai strategi Pivot to Asia yang fokus terhadap

Chapter Greater Malay

There was never a Malaysian and Indonesian 'border' before the 1824 Anglo-Dutch Treaty. There were not even Malaysia or Indonesia. There was only Malay Archipelago, Malay world and Nusantara.

After the arrival of the colonialists, they reconstructed the identity of Nusantara people according to their mould.

Under the Dutch, the isles of Sumatra, Java, Kalimantan, and Sulawesi for example, were grouped together as "East India". There was not anything "Indian" about these isles. But the naming separated the identity of the people of Malay Archipelago who lived under the British rule.

Since the Dutch were brutal, the anti-colonial spirit was potent among the people of East India. Indonesians are proud of the bloody revolution in their struggle for independence.

Not so much for us Malaysians. The British were bad, but at least they were civilized. So the transfer of power from the British to Malayan and North Borneo elites occurred without any bloodshed. There exists a different nationhood experience. To them, the red color at their Sang Saka Merah Putih flag represents the blood spilled during the revolution to overthrow the Dutch.

Due to the lack of common identity, the attempt to unite the Malay world to become "Greater Indonesia" and "Greater Malay" failed. In fact, there was an episode of hostility, or the Confrontation because Sukarno considered Malaysia a Western-sponsored stooge. It was after the establishment of ASEAN that both countries reached a little understanding.

The border which separates us is an artificial legacy of the colonialists. It is pointless for one to be overly nationalistic. We can love our country (patriotism), but do not cross the line by hating other countries, what more if they are leaves of the same tree.

Hence, Indonesians and Malaysians should stop bickering, provoking, name-calling or claiming local cultures.

Chapter Minutes to Midnight

Our world at this moment is the closest in approaching the doomsday since 1953.

Fans of Linkin Park must have remembered their album entitled Minutes to Midnight. The title was inspired by the Doomsday Clock created by a group of scientists at the University of Chicago in 1947, after the start of the Cold War.

The Doomsday Clock was created to show how close we are to the doomsday. Doomsday refers to a nuclear Armageddon or nuclear war between the US and Russia, where a number of nuclear weapons owned by the two states are more than enough to blow the world.

The maiden use of the nuclear bomb by the US in 1945 was to end the Second World War. Russia became the second nuclear power in 1949. Even so, both the US and Russia avoid causing the Third World War as they realize that it would bring great disaster.

The clock hand would move from left to right according to the changes in the world's geopolitics. If the geopolitical situation became tense, the risk of a nuclear war would also increase, the clock hand would move to the right, closer to 12 midnight that signs the doomsday. The closer the clock is to number 12, the closer we are to doomsday.

The closest the Doomsday Clock to 12 midnight was in 1953, clocking at 23:58 or two minutes before 12 midnight, after Russia tested their hydrogen bomb. Next in 1984, the clock hand pointed to 23:57 or three minutes before 12 midnight, when Russia almost launched missiles to Europe after it was provoked by military exercise at its border.

The Doomsday Clock is pointed at 23:57:30, or 2 ½ minutes to 12 midnight, since January 2007. Following the development a few days ago, the world seems to be at the brink of war. "1 minute before midnight" is a more appropriate description of the current world.

In Syria, Russia threatened to counter the US attack in order to protect Syria. In the Korean peninsula, the US sent warships as a show of force against North Korea. Russia and North Korea have a thousand excuses to launch a first strike because this is a matter of their survival. A terrible nuclear war would break when the first strike is responded with a US second strike.

Trump is not foolish. Trump is also not insane like Dr.

Strangelove who wanted to blow the world up. He is trying to practice coercive diplomacy to play it tough. China has already given their blessing to Trump's action. Rex Tillerson will be visiting Moscow to de-escalate the US-Russia tension. But such action would always pose some risks. One wrong move and we will all have to say goodbye.

On April 6, 2017, Trump ordered a strike on Syria as a response to the gas attack on the residents of Idlib. The action caught many by surprise because he opposed any kind of US intervention in Syria. Many perceived that Trump has been assimilated by the neocons and become the same with George W. Bush and Hillary Clinton. At the same time, Trump also sent warships to North Korea. Looks like he was going to trigger World War 3.

A week later (12 April 2017), Trump announced that "we are not going into Syria." Meaning that he had no intention to launch a full-scale war. Trump also said that "China will get a better trade deal if it solves the North Korean problem". He hinted that if China lends a hand to solve the North Korean problem, the US would reduce pressure on China in the issue of trade as a reward.

What had happened? Is Trump a flip-flop?

Those who are familiar with US foreign policy would still remember Richard Nixon (1969–1974). There are many similarities between Nixon and Trump; both are populists, skeptical of the media, used racial rhetoric to win votes in the southern states, habitual liars, challenging the consensus of the elites and most importantly, look like a madman.

Are they really mad, or they pretend to be mad?

Basically, there are two ways of winning a war; force and cunningness. Cunningness involves the use of trick, deception to minimize loss of lives and properties. Sun Tzu said, "All war is deception"; Machiavelli said, "To use deceit in the managing of war is a glorious thing"; even the prophet Muhammad said, (al-harb al-khush) — "war is deception". Tricks can be used to hoodwink the enemy and foil their attempt to guess our moves.

One of the ways of deception is pretending to be mad, as suggested by Machiavelli in his book Discourses on Livy, "It is a wise thing to simulate madness" because mad people are considered unpredictable.

Even the use of force by superpower has its limit. There are times when the US has to resort to tricks.

In 1968, Nixon won the election by promising "Peace with Honor". The American people were very unfavorable in the Vietnam War, and victory was not in sight for the US. However, Nixon did not want to admit defeat as suggested by the Democrat candidate. Nixon vowed that he would bring North Vietnam to the negotiation table, an unrealistic promise because the latter had many advantages.

Nixon advisor, Henry Kissinger was a realist well-versed in the works of Machiavelli. Kissinger gave Nixon a piece of advice, "Mr. President, you only need to act mad." So Kissinger spread the news that Nixon is a drunkard that does his work while he is drunk. Then Kissinger purposely told Soviet Ambassador to the US, Anatoly Dobrynin that "My president is emotionally unstable, but unfortunately he has the control of the nuclear button." Dobrynin thought the information was legitimate and delivered it to the Soviet leader, Leonid Brezhnev. Since then Brezhnev was very cautious toward Nixon.

Kissinger advised Nixon to "back words with action". Hence, on October 13, 1969, Nixon ordered 18 B52 aircraft carrying nuclear bombs to fly in Soviet airspace, roaming around for 23 days. Soviet panicked at the thought of an attack by Nixon. However, on October 30, 1969, Nixon ordered all aircraft to return. The Soviets were thrown into confusion trying to understand Nixon's intention. Hence Kissinger told the Soviets once again, "The emotion of Mr. President is less stable, I am not sure what he is going to do next."

Six months later, Nixon launched a massive bombing campaign onto Cambodia, neighbor of Vietnam. The action sparked massive protests from the people. They considered him betraying his election manifesto. But the unexpected event resulted in Soviet pressure on North Vietnam, because the action seemed to prove the madman theory all these while. They feared that Nixon would have done far more dangerous things if his demand toward Vietnam was unfulfilled.

In February 1972, Nixon visited China, which was then a Soviet enemy. The incident prompted Moscow to further pressure North Vietnam to negotiate with the US. Finally, in May 1972, Nixon visited Moscow and met with Brezhnev and reached an agreement on the Vietnam situation. North Vietnam had to stop the attacks and negotiate with the US. In January 1973, the US ended the Vietnam War through the Paris Peace Accord.

The stellar record of Nixon's foreign policy won him the 1972 election with a landslide victory. Were it not for the Watergate scandal, Nixon's name would have been carved in the stone as one of the greatest US Presidents.

Although Trump promised to make peace with Russia, it is not easy to achieve. Less than a month as the country's security adviser, Michael Flynn was forced to resign because he was too close to Russia, and under pressure from the anti-Russian neocon factions. Among the many issues, Russia is still the dominant one; if Trump is following Putin's pace, then the neocon will try to oust Trump. Even mainstream media are actively sponsoring Trump's story as Putin's puppet, in order to thwart US-Russian peace.

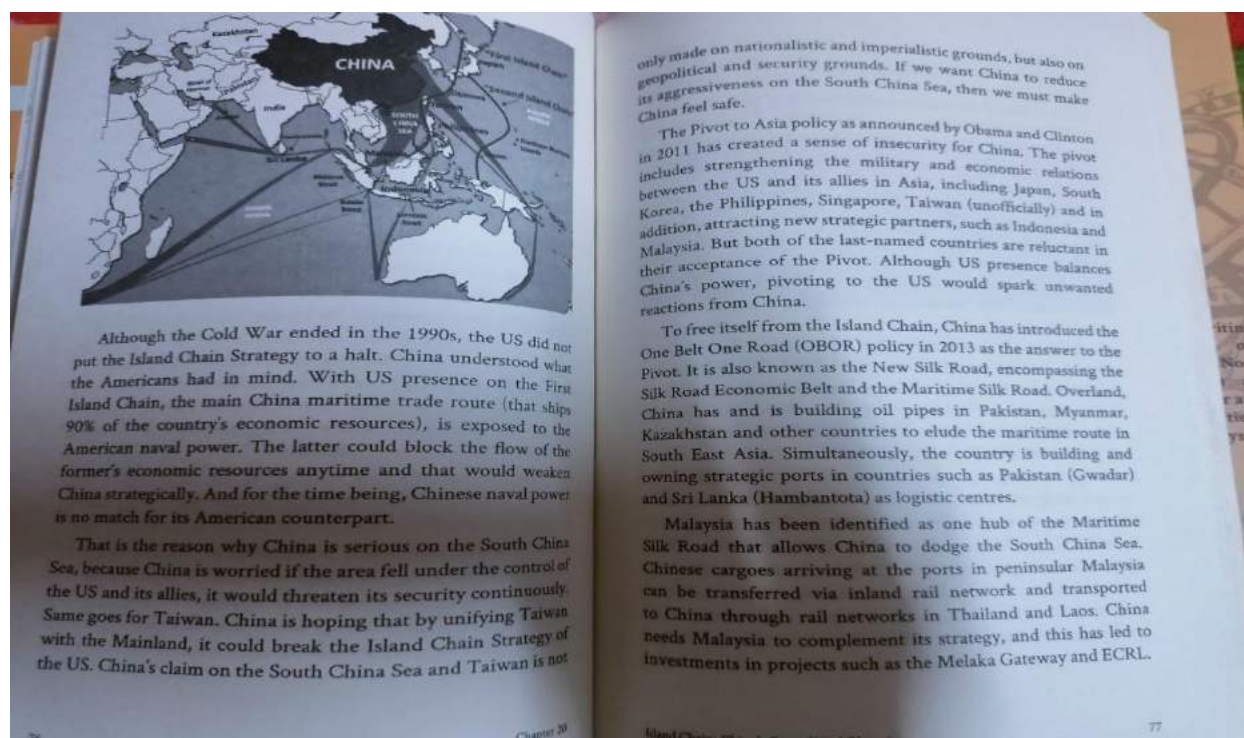

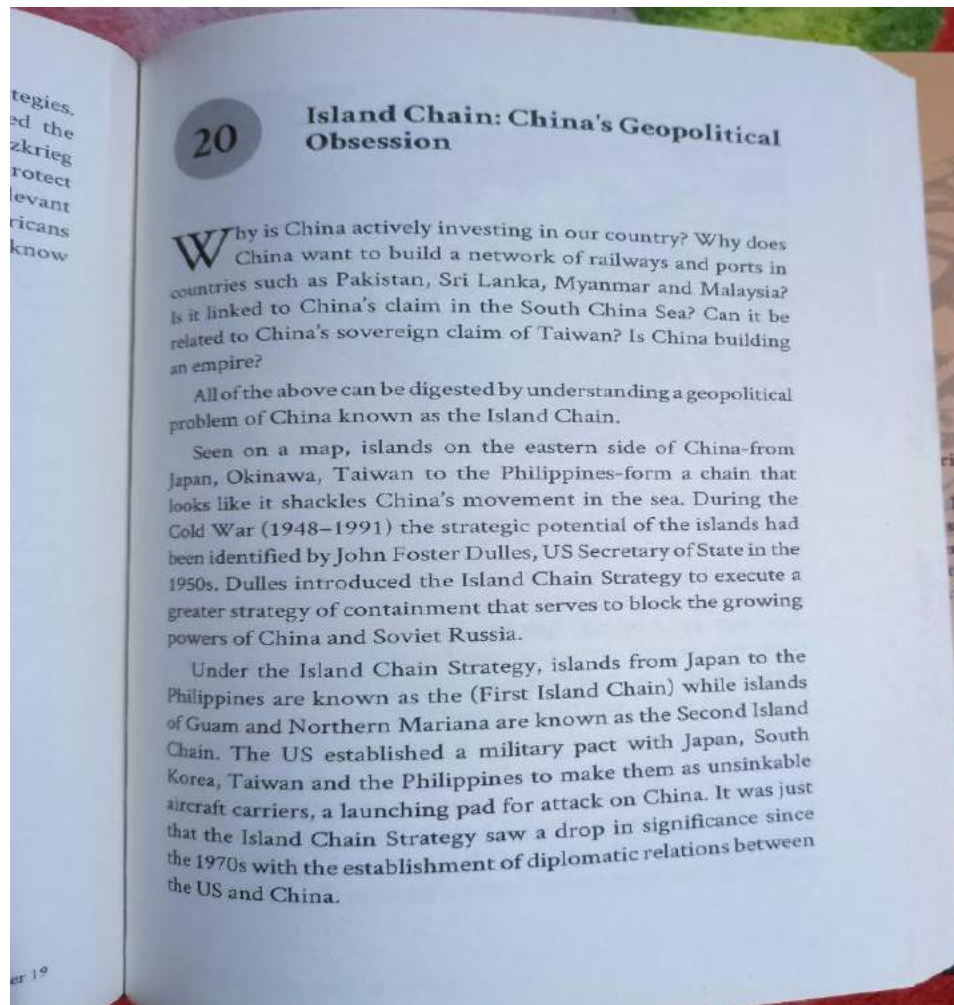

Trump needs a show of force to show he's not pro-Russian and weak. At the same time, action in Syria could warn North Koreans of provocation at the same time.

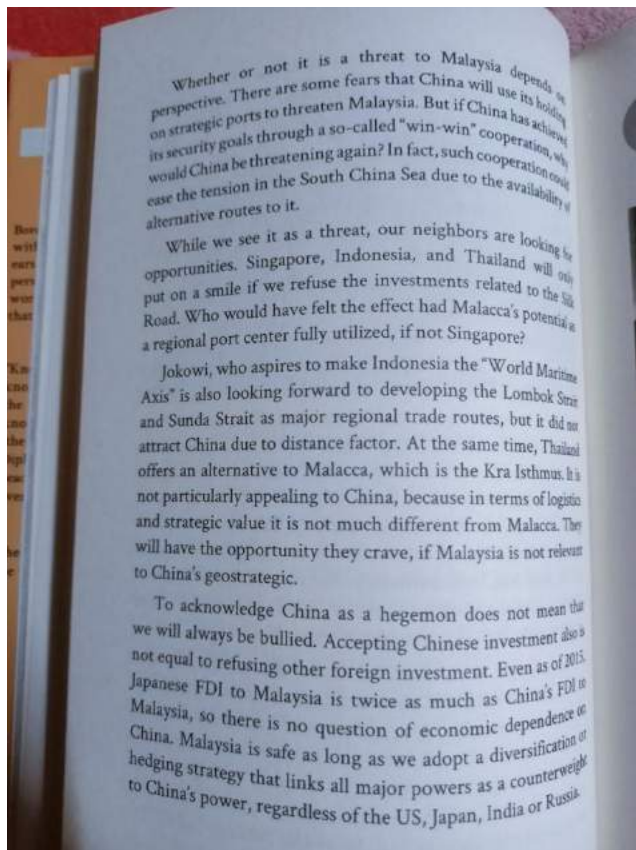

Trump's actions indicated that he is not just a chatter and this is troubling China. If North Korea fell to the US, it would threaten the security of China which needs North Korea as a buffer state. From Trump's perspective, China will pressure North Korea to stop provoking the US. China has leverage over North Korea just as the Soviet had leverage over North Vietnam.

His unexpected actions will also force Russia to re-evaluate its strategy, because according to Putin's initial calculations, Trump and European populist leaders will make peace with Russia and repeal the economic sanctions on Russia, without harming Russia. Now things are upside down. There is a possibility that Putin will give Trump concession to protect his interests.

Trump's seeming insanity and insecurity led Russia and China to be more careful not to be 'trumped' by Trump. The matter thought as a joke turned out to be something serious, and the matter was thought as serious turned out to be some kind of joke. Compared to Obama, Trump is harder for Putin and Xi Jinping to deal with.
